The workshop to lead change and develop culture

If you need to change or develop your organization while the culture stick to "the way we do things around here", then here's the business case: If you don’t work with culture, it might work against you.

Develop an effective organizational culture to make your (client) organization more engaged, innovative, competitive, agile, collaborative, efficient, and productive.

This open workshop shows how to diagnose culture with the validated Organizational Culture Assessment Instrument (OCAI), developed by University of Michigan professors Kim Cameron & Robert Quinn. Next, we look at how to change culture with Change Circles or Interaction Interventions based on Positive Leadership.

Many organizational programs fail because they ignore current culture or because they try to change the culture in a top-down way. Let's try a better approach to organizational change and development. Join this workshop and learn to include and engage others with positive leadership, and work with culture so that people might create successful change and development.

Marcella Bremer leads this workshop, assisted by one of our partner consultants. The workshop is based on her books "Organizational Culture Change: Unleash your Organization’s Potential in Circles of 10" and "Develop a Positive Culture where People and Performance thrive."

Who can attend?
This workshop is for leaders of all levels, consultants, and other professionals. This workshop is a prerequisite for consultants who’d like to become partners of OCAI Online.

Seasoned consultants can help juniors during the interactive parts, so that we all benefit from the expertise in the room.

Theory Topics
The central lectures cover the basis theory to ensure a shared understanding of culture, change, and positive leadership. In addition, you’ll receive checklists and handouts during the workshop. It's not necessary to read Marcella's books in advance.

Paradigms of organizational change
Guiding change with CVF and Change Circles
Meetings and Interventions

Culture, Change, Leadership
In the lectures, we look at what culture is, and what exactly makes up a positive culture.

We’ll explore the Competing Values Framework, the OCAI, and its four culture types. We make culture operational by not only looking at values, but also at beliefs and especially behaviors. There are effective and ineffective expressions of the four culture types.

We’ll take a quick look at Positive Leadership (based on Positive Organizational Scholarship).

We explore two paradigms of organizational change, resulting in different change approaches. We could use organization-wide Change Circles or quick and personal Interaction Interventions (and influence other “positive energizers” in the organization).

Change Circles are small and foster dialogue and safety (as opposed to debate or disengagement). People work on personal change as well as organizational/team culture and change. They work on culture from values to daily behaviors, agree on what to change, and how to do so. In addition to behavioral change, adjustments in structure, processes, or strategy might be developed for each team.

Interaction Interventions can be a fast start to develop a (more) positive culture by actively asking, listening, sharing, and responding.

Meetings are hot-spots of culture, so changing some meeting practices help, too. Access to the Positive Culture Academy is included!

Practice
The interactive parts of the workshop help to reflect on and practice the tools and theory. Be prepared to answer reflection questions, to team up with others, to work on a case, and engage in “Triad Consulting”.

If you are a seasoned consultant who knows it all, you can contribute and engage with others during the practice parts.

The other participants might be able to support you after the workshop. For this reason, we’ll also create a private LinkedIn group to exchange questions and experiences online.

Preparation
Participants are invited to submit a culture case in advance. Some cases can be discussed and developed during the workshop.

Time schedule
Learn from the online Positive Culture Academy and the OCAI culture change leadership videos in advance.

Attend the live, real-time group video-calls via Zoom: 3 days with 3 group sessions between 1 and 6 PM CET (Europe/Africa), between 7 AM and 12 EST (America’s east coast) and between 7 PM and Midnight SGT (Asia). CHECK YOUR TIME ZONE!
